

PRINCIPLE

“THE HUMAN BEING IS THE YARDSTICK AND HIS WELL-BEING IS OUR GOAL”

We are especially committed to this motto which was created by our founder, Heinz Trox.

Human beings and their well-being are therefore at the centre of our business. This applies to our work in the scientific world as well as in the social and cultural sectors. Human well-being is ensured when people are provided with the essentials for daily life.

This includes:

- Food and accommodation
- Clothing and security
- Health and education
- Communication and transport
- Science and research

Communities are often unable to offer these necessities in the appropriate amount or quality to all their members. This is where our social commitment comes in.

We support projects:

- which help people to help themselves
- which are geared towards sustainability
- which encourage third parties to take responsibility
- which enable synergies and explore additional resources

We are a reliable partner when cooperating with third parties to develop projects which serve to improve human welfare.

Cooperation with third parties does not preclude the Heinz Trox Foundation from developing and operating its own projects.

Alongside project work, the Foundation will continue providing smaller grants for individual measures or institutions at the German TROX GmbH locations, a practice which was followed by the founder for over two decades.

Heinz Trox's view always comprised the whole world. With his view in mind, we will develop and participate in projects regionally, nationally and internationally.

We pursue active communication. This includes informing the public about our goals, projects and the use of resources.
